Design

The design process starts with a detailed understanding of the project, its requirements and vision through discussions with the clients & architects.

It is taken further by collecting detailed and complete information pertaining to the site, climate, internal & external factors, user profiles, behavioral patterns etc.

The methodology continues through forming a overall vision for the project and a framework for evolution.

The design undergoes series of brain storming sessions, discussions and building up of ideas through sketches, specifications, detailing etc.

Finally through continuous refinement of design - arrive at the ideal solution suited for the needs and goals of the project.

Landscape helps improve any building and its environment in terms of beauty

The smallest of spaces can be landscaped to provide a soothing corner in a house, says landscape architect S JEYAKUMAR larly with IT companies, domestic ventures and international projects setting base here. Several educational institutions, industrial establishments, SEZ and institutions in the hospitality sector are getting professional help to landscape their premises. Their needs and purpose may vary depending on the type of the project. For instance, a five-star hotel would want a space to be landscaped to meet more of aesthetic needs, whereas a park would require it to serve more of functional needs such as a walkway for joggers or morning walkers. Several promoters, too, have started adding landscaped spaces in projects as one of their USPs.

What is landscaping and why is it done?

Landscaping is the design of open spaces. Such spaces can be located within or outside buildings; they may be courtyards or land attached to or new buildings.

Landscape architecture takes into consideration three primary design aspects: aesthetic, functional and environmental. It involves spatial planning and the design of landscape elements such as gazebos, pergolas, water features, meandering pathways and ponds.

Landscape helps improve any building and its environment in terms of beauty. It improves the micro environment of the place, serves as a foreground for a building and, among other things, helps in water harvesting.

Large-scale landscaping, such as creation of green belts and afforestation, tremendously improves the micro climate of a place and city. Landscape architecture is a professional field that requires expertise in spatial planning & design, structural design, lighting design, irrigation design and planting design to name a few. It should involve a specialist — a landscape architect to design the space to meet specific needs and style. Therefore, merely planting plants or laying a lawn in a space does not qualify as complete landscaping.

Is there a demand for landscaping in Coimbatore?
There is. And it is growing, particu-
